Bryant University is pleased to make Information Services resources, e.g., the Internet, Email, etc., available for faculty, staff, students, alumni, and related constituent groups for conducting activities in support of the mission of the University. These resources are a privilege, not a right, and electronic records of information created through their use are the property of Bryant University. Thus, Bryant reserves the right to monitor the operation of these resources, to access information and data contained therein, and to retain or dispose of those records as it deems necessary.

Acceptable uses include, but are not limited to, official University business, academic research, and academic discussion. Unacceptable uses include, but are not limited to, activities disrupting the effective operation of Bryant networks, operation and/or solicitation of non-Bryant commercial businesses, unauthorized copying and use of software and documentation, sending messages which could be construed as harassing, derogatory, inflammatory, or obscene, and activities interfering with an employee's productive work time.

Individuals using these resources may make occasional non-commercial and incidental use of them, to send and receive personal electronic communications, but should be aware that, given current limitations for ensuring complete data security, Bryant University cannot guarantee absolute privacy of the information sent, received, or stored. In using these resources, constituent groups acknowledge Bryant University's ownership of these resources and its rights with regard to use.

As with all University policies, this policy will be reviewed and revised as appropriate, and as technology and use change. Revisions will be posted throughout the University.
