WHAT SETS BRYANT'S PROGRAM APART?

1 Design Your Path to Law School

- The American Bar Association does not recommend any specific undergraduate major to prepare for a legal education, and students are admitted to law school from any discipline.
- As you explore the wide range of courses in both the College of Business and the College of Arts and Sciences, you will develop essential critical thinking and communication skills.
- Bryant is nationally recognized for integrating business with the arts and sciences, providing you with exposure to a broader range of ideas than most of your peers applying to law school from other undergraduate programs.

2 Experiential Learning Opportunities

- A partnership between Bryant University and The Washington Center in Washington, D.C., provides you with semester-long internship opportunities that have included the White House, the FBI, leading think tanks, and prominent law firms.
- Pre-Law students have held internships in the R.I. Attorney General's Office and in the court system, law and consulting firms, and non-profit organizations.
- Faculty-led trips off campus include the opportunity to learn about war crime trials in European courts in a special summer course, as well as trips to special sessions held by the United Nations in New York City.

3 Opportunities for Leadership and Involvement

- Participate in the student-led Law Society, Bryant Debaters, Mock Trial, Model United Nations, and other extracurricular activities developed for students interested in legal issues.
- Engage with practicing lawyers, law school professionals, and alumni in the legal field at frequent events hosted on campus by Pre-Law Advisors.

Bryant helped cement my decision to go to law school. Although I was firmly committed to majoring in business, the College of Arts and Sciences gave me the opportunity to take courses in legal studies and sociology. Through these courses, I discovered my passion for social justice and felt confident in applying to law school.
